What's behind the Energy Research Institute?

by Elton Manzione and the Osceola staff

It's a good idea on the face of it--an independent, private institute inspired to some extent by North Carolina's Research Triangle and established to study South Carolina's energy problems and make inquiries into the areas of energy conservation and alternative energy sources. In fact, it seems like a really good idea--private industry funding an institute of top experts in order to squarely face our growing energy problems and seek solutions.

The good idea, the S.C. Energy Research Institute (ERI), was formed by executive order of Governor James B. Edwards on April 26 of this year. The executive order said ERI would be an institution, the goal of which would be to provide higher per-capita income by increasing the availability of reasonably-priced energy. The executive order said ERI would be a privately-funded, non-profit company. The executive order described a board of directors which would consist of representatives of industry, business, consumers and environmentalists.

A statement of purpose prepared in conjunction with the executive order said the fledgling institute would investigate the state's energy options broadly, examining solar energy, wind power, geothermal conversion, tidal conversion and fossil fuels. The institute would also investigate the areas of energy conservation and nuclear energy. According to the statement of purpose, a foundation would be established to seek private funds for the institute--funds which would begin to fill institute coffers by July, 1977.

On the whole, it seemed like a very good idea. But like all good ideas, it is the reality--the end product of the idea--which counts, and, like many good ideas before it, ERI seems to have lost some of its noble purpose in the gap between inspiration and implementation.

Take the board of directors. The idea was to represent a broad spectrum of interest, but in reality the board is heavily weighted in favor of utility companies and nuclear-related industries. In fact, nearly half of the 21-member board is made up of representatives of electric utilities and nuclear industries. The remaining half includes prominent representatives of banking, construction, and textile interests, the state government, with one nuclear scientist thrown in to add technical flavor. The present board, which was chosen by a steering committee established by the governor, includes no research scientists from state institutions and no members who represent environmental or consumer interests, unless major industrial energy users are considered as representative of consumers. And while ERI's original statement of purpose referred to consumer and environmental representatives, the by-laws of the new institute exclude this reference and say board members will come from "industry, business, finance, academics and government." Bye, bye consumers and environmentalists.

The makeup of the board and the evidenced predisposition of its members seem to lend credence to arguments from institute critics who theorize ERI was really set up as a pro-nuclear organization which would act as a helmsman to steer South Carolina on an unerring course toward nuclear preeminence in the South, and perhaps the nation.

A source familiar with ERI's early developmental stages explained that "later on we learned...it wasn't this all-purpose energy research group that is going to look into alternative forms of energy; what it was turning out to be was a pro-nuclear group gathering their forces together under the wing of the governor."

A source in the Governor's office, who worked on the ERI proposal during its planning stage, said he felt the whole focus of the group was in the nuclear area, despite pronouncements regarding alternate energy sources.

"They might be saying they're looking into other energy areas," the source said, "but the major focus when I was there was on nuclear. The idea was to keep energy decision-making out of the hands of the public sector and in the hands of the private sector."By channeling state, federal and private funds for energy research and development into the institute, the private nature of which would significantly curtail public input and public scrutiny.

Even Walter Pettis, chief aide to Governor Edwards and one of the initial forces behind the formation of ERI, gave credence to the theory when he explained how ERI came to be.

Shortly after Edwards took office, Pettis said, representatives of Duke Power, SCE&G, the Savannah River Plant, Carolina Power and Light, Allied General Nuclear Services and Westinghouse came to brief the governor on energy needs and problems within the state. Complaints about government red tape dominated the conversation. The Governor and Pettis later met with representatives of the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC). Pettis said the Governor came to the conclusion that while South Carolina had good energy resources, it also had some energy "problems"--problems that the Governor felt lay in the regulatory area.

"It became obvious to us," Pettis said in a recent interview, "that there was a need to listen to anyone working in the energy area, and if there was an opportunity to support energy production, South Carolina had a definite commitment to it."

Exactly how ERI can help utilities and energy industries in "the regulatory area" has never been made clear. Critics suggest that a major focus of ERI may be to help smooth the way for continued nuclear development in the state. Nuclear-related industries have encountered by far the most "regulatory problems" in the last decade. Witness for example the controversy surrounding the construction and operation of the Barnwell nuclear fuel reprocessing plant. Opponents of the project have used regulations and red tape to delay the start-up. And events of the past year suggest a growing public opposition to unbridled nuclear development in the state; utilities

Economic expectations

We tend to think of the economic structure as some ironclad mechanism, a huge machine in fact. But the reality is that this system rests on a jellylike substratum of flighty hopes and fears. Put differently, economists have come in recent decades to understand the crucial importance of expectations in the economic process. And expectations become overwhelmingly important as mass communication becomes more instantaneous, such that every streetcorner grocer can know this month's inflation rate, and perhaps the projections for the next year.

It was Maynard Keynes whose revolutionary General Theory of 1936 awakened economists to the full import of expectations. For Keynes postulated that expectations, as expressed in opinions about the future movements of interest rates, governed exactly what interest rates would be. Now as interest rates go up, asset prices go down, and vice versa. Hence, Keynes found that prices depend on much more than the simple, stable elements of supply and demand--they depend as well on emotions!

A latter-day Keynesian, name of G.L.S. Shackle, has elaborated this notion: he postulates that valuation of an asset depends on expectations--expectations about tomorrow's valuations of the asset, expectations about next year's valuations. That is, valuation depends on expectations, and expectation depends on imagination. Again, the wild and flightly imperatives of human emotion are introduced into the presumably rational, deterministic economic mechanism. It's as if it were discovered that the flight paths of jet airplanes were deeply influenced by the mood of the swallows flying nearby.

Shackle, in fine tooling some of Keynes's thoughts, has remarked that in order for the price of an asset to be stable, even for a minute, it will be such that speculators in the asset are divided between the Bulls and the Bears. In other words, if, say, the price of soymeal is $5 a bushel today, then we can be sure that it is so because half the traders in meal think the price will fall and thus won't

> "...the economic system belies its image as the solid bedrock of rationality, operating through a concrete infrastructure of industrial and financial enterprises. In fact, it is as dependent as the teenager lover is on fickle emotions, on mere expectations..."

pay more than $5 (they fear loss), and the other half think it will rise and wish to pay $5 in order to reap the gain expected later. (Throughout this discussion, an "asset" can be anything that is bought and sold, though it usually refers to a durable good used in production, or a financial instrument.)

Now economists have long attempted to measure expectations in mechanisitic ways. There's the familiar formula for the elasticity of price expectations, whereby if people are assumed to hold "elastic" expectations then a 10 per cent price increase now will give rise to expectations of a more than 10 percent increase next period. If they are expected to hold "inelastic" expectations then they'll assume prices in the next period won't go up by as much as 10 percent. And so on. But unfortunately for economic theorists, human expectations aren't so easily captured. They tend to change. This presents econometriciats with a real dilemma. If manifold economic phenomena depend so heavily on expectations, then expectations must be somehow measured, accounted for in the equations of an economic mode.

In recent years, it has become fashionable to "capture" the effects of expectations by resorting to what's known as the "rational expectations" hypothesis. This hypothesis states that nowadays, given the national news and the availability of financial newspapers, economic consulting services, econometric models, and the like, then most people, or the people who count, have access to the best predictions of the economic future. Thus, whatever an econometric model forecasts for the next period can, under the "rational expectations" hypothesis, be considered identical to what people expect. The device evades the uncertainty of future expectations all too neatly.

A major conclusion resulting from the use of the "rational expectations" hypothesis is the idea that government can only have an impact on economic magnitudes if it uses surprise. That is, since everyone will immediately discount (adjusted for) any changes announced or known to be instigated by the government, then only unanticipated changes in, for example, the money supply, will change the pulse of economic activity.

And of course the stock market's girlish perfidy seems to demonstrate that expectations may feed themselves. A quarter-point upward movement in interest rates, or a fat monthly trade deficit becomes egregiously important to the market--but only because stock market traders think these movements are important. In fact, short-term movements in interest rate and the trade deficit have no necessary import at all upon the real economy. But the irrationality of frightened and uninformed speculation will create Draconian monsters from innocent aberrations. Expectations are at work. And then, they do become important.

Well, the point is that the economic system belies its image as the solid bedrock of rationality, operating through a concrete infrastructure of industrial and financial enterprises. In fact, it is an dependent as the teenaged lover is on fickle emotions, on mere expectations.

Duck takes dive

Who killed Howard the Duck?

Little more than a month after his mysterious appearance on The State newspaper comics page, "cynic and social critic" Howard the Duck's life-line was cut off on August 1st, with nary a word of why.

The mystery unfolded on June 27th when a front page box announced that beginning that day a new cartoon feature would be added to the comics page. The new strip featured Howard the Duck, who had managed already to make a name for himself in comic books, and now was apparently ready to branch out to bigger and better things with syndication. So successful was HTD in comic book form that even though it has only been in existence for about a year, Esquire magazine earlier this year picked it as a collectible that would rapidly increase in value.

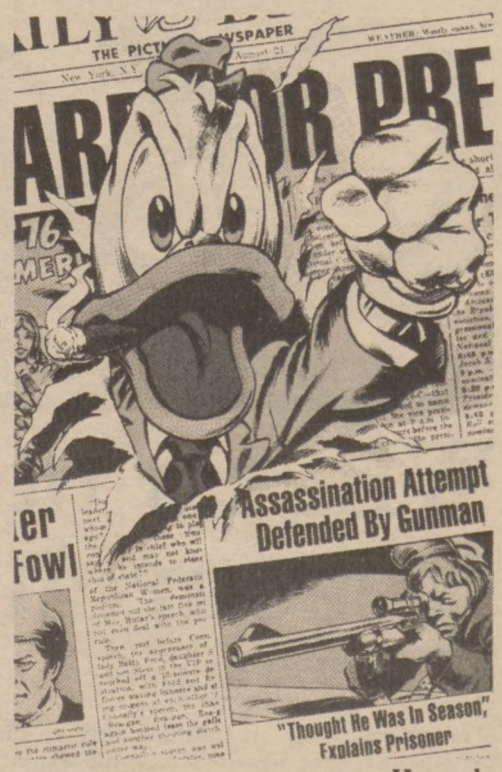
Howard, who bears a strange, uncanny resemblance to another comic page duck (Disney's Donald), "is no ordinary duck"The State announced that day. In fact, Howard was probably not really a duck in whatever world he came from (at least not in our sense of the word), but because of "a shift in the cosmic axis that touched off a balance between his universe and ours," he was "blinked out" of his own world and blinked into ours, with touch-down in Cleveland. As the comic book described him over and over again, "he was trapped in a world he never made."

The resemblance to Donald Duck, of course, ended with the physical similarity. Howard's "cantankerous," most times obnoxious nature and his obvious disgust with the human race made him anything but the slap-happy, bumbling quacker that Donald was famous for being.

Then came the barrage of letters. Not a huge number, says the State's managing editor Bob Pierce, but enough to matter. A half-dozen or more appeared during July, complaining about Howard's entry into The State. The strip was criticized as being "rotten" or "yuck" or worse. Several letters claimed it made no sense or that it wasn't funny, while others called it "an insult to the memory of Walt Disney" and to "our beloved Donald Duck." One woman suggested that the strip was not for "normal"people and said her dad was for many years Walt Disney's "Duck Man" and that his blood pressure problem might be aggravated by just the sight of such sacrilege.

So on Monday, August 1st, HTD stopped appearing among the daily strips. Unlike the front page introduction he received when he joined The State, his exit was low key and abrupt. "Whatever you do is going to stir up a fuss," Pierce told Osceola by way of explaining why Howard had been cut without a word. "You can't win." The reason Howard was cut at all, according to Pierce, was that Pierce "concluded that people didn't like it, including people on the staff." He admitted the strip began in the middle of a sequence which may have affected the way people perceived the comic, but apparently that was not enough to give Howard another chance. The mail, apparently, was too heavily against it.

HTD enthusiasts don't find it near as puzzling that Howard was cut from The



Howard

State as that he was ever started to begin with. Some figured The State just added the new comic without really realizing what they were doing. But Pierce says no. "I was fairly familiar with it as a comic book," Pierce said. He said he figured it might just be something that would catch on, something to "attract the more avant-garde readers."

But HTD just didn't work out, so he's gone. There have been pro-HTD letters since Howard's departure ("three" Pierce says), but not nearly as many as were sent demanding his head. One long letter, the best of those printed, tried to explain the idea and background behind HTD as satire with an "alien" from another time being thrown into our time which allows us to look at ourselves through the alien's eyes. The letter concludes by saying, "I remember the furor that surrounded the Columbia Record when 'Doonesbury' first appeared. It's amazing how they withstood the criticism, whereas The State couldn't handle but a few weeks of it. It makes me wonder are we that afraid to read something serious, look for what's really there, and then possibly see ourselves in it?"

And so, Howard has once again, by some strange twist of the cosmic axis been picked up from one world and plucked down in another, only God knows where. It's sure not Columbia...

Johnson replies

Dear Sir:

While I was flattered (and surprised) by the "Rumors and Speculation" suggestion that I am the frontrunner for the position of Executive Director of the South Carolina Democratic Party, I must take a couple of exceptions to other statements from the same article (July 22 edition).

First, and quite importantly to me, I am not "a member of the anti-Fowler camp." As a member of the State Executive Committee and Executive Council for the past three years, I have frequently been in disagreement with Chairman; however, I believe Don has provided capable, intelligent leadership for the State Party during some tough years... particularly the Nixon-Thurmond years, which could have produced a strong Republican party in the Palmetto State without Don's solid, competent leadership (and, not incidentally, incredible stupidity on the part of the GOP leadership).

Secondly, I believe your observation that "Fowler is not expected to support Johnson" is without basis in the facts of what's really happening. Don's participation in the process of a new Executive Director appears to be without prejudice or a desire to control the situation; as I perceive it, he is committed to having the Executive Committee find and employ the best person for the job.

Beyond these personal concerns, your analysis of the Democratic party situation is quite perceptive and well-written. Congratulations on continuing to do an excellent job of political reporting...a week without Osceola is like a week without knowing what's going on!

Bomb the scum

Dear Sir:

If Ed Meadows is interested in doing a follow-up to his July 15 article about scummy people, I strongly suggest that he drop by a bowling alley and observe the clientele. There he will find hordes of dregs: women with beehives, men with tatoos and giant pot-bellies--Blue Ribbon, of course--and about six good teeth among all of them.

He can watch them convert their paychecks into rolls of quarters to be pumped into pinball machines; then he can share in their excitement when they win $10 after putting $140 in the machine. And of course there is the bowling.. ever wonder why it's not in the Olympics?

Yes Ed, there is a subhuman species and its cultural center is the bowling alley. If an extraterrestrial being would land at a bowling alley, he would surely conclude that there is no intelligent live on this planet.

Futhermore, Ed may want to submit his findings to Jimmy Carter. I understand that Carter is looking for a place to test the neutron bomb, and a bowling alley would be an excellent testing site since no humans would be affected. If Ed does decide to pursue futher research on this previously little known species and can't make it to the bowling alley, then he can always try racing, rasslin' or the roller derby.

Vaught vote

Dear Sir:

I wish to thank you for publishing the vote in the General Assembly that confirmed Winston Vaught as a family court judge. I am enclosing a copy of an open letter to Messrs. T. Ed Garrison, M.E. McDonald, and Herbert Morgan, state senators that voted for Mr. Vaught. It was published in the Messenger, our local newspaper. I sent a copy to each of these gentlemen with my return address. None has replied or, so far as I can learn, made a public explanation of his vote.

To the Clemson Messenger: "I am writing an open letter to three of our district's Senators: Messrs. T. Ed. Garrison, M.E. McDonald, and Herbert E. Morgan.

"Gentlemen: On Friday, June 17, the General Assembly voted 85 to 30 to elect Winston W. Vaught of Conway a family court judge for the 15th Judicial circuit. This was done despite a State Supreme Court reprimand of Vaught for unethical conduct while practicing as a private attorney during the 1960s. In addition to the reprimand three judicial screening committees declared Vaught unqualified to become a family court judge.

"Osceola newsweekly listed you three senators as voting for Vaught, whereas your colleague Harris Smith said he could not "in good conscience" vote for a candidate reprimanded by the Supreme Court and disqualified by screening committees. There may be more to this than appears on the surface. Would you gentlemen care to explain your vote to your constituents?"

Law collective

Dear Sir:

A law collective was formed August 6 to fight the nuclear front in the courts: PALM, The Palmetto Alliance Legal Mission. The convenors forming the Mission were the attorneys Louis Pitts, Bob Warren and Bob Guild, with paralegal Pat Kwarta and secretary/paralegal Rita Fellers, along with Brett Bursey, professional plaintiff, whose Petition to Intervene in the hearings for the operating license of the Parr Nuclear Plant was discussed. So far no one has succeeded in obtaining leave to intervene in this Hearing, but through Brett's petition we may be able to testify there. Several other attorneys and legal staffers have voiced their interest and support but were unable to attend this meeting.

We also discussed legal actions we can institute to stop the operation of the Barnwell Nuclear Fuel Reprocessing Plant, to get out testimony before local County Councils and other boards of review, and to protect the rights of people and groups who take public stands against the utilities. We discovered that we have a pool of resources among ourselves to start a complete legal office from top to bottom to defend the environment. We discussed the formation of other task forces to attack specialized aspects of the anti-nuclear fight, such as community education and helping electrical consumers set up energy self-sufficient homes with solar hot water heaters and other equipment, so we can make the alternatives to the electrical monopolies available to people and partially or completely supplant the power companies in everyone's homes.

PALM is ready to go to work. Its members are anxious to get the legal front moving, and everyone interested in working on the anti-nuclear movement can count on PALM's protection from here on out.

Picking judges

Dear Mr. Norton:

Thank you very much for sending me the May 6th issue of Osceola dealing with "The politics of picking judges." I think it is an excellent piece of reporting and I appreciate the accuracy of the quotes from my interview with you. I know that several of the legislators have read the article because they have commented to me about it. I am satisfied that most of the younger legislators favor merit selection and abolition of the pledge custom. It remains to be seen how long their enthusiasm will hold and whether or not the senior legislators can be persuaded toward the same view. Hopefully, articles like yours will help.

Cops wage civil war at North Myrtle Beach

by Buz Martin

North Myrtle Beach-- Up until a few weeks ago, it had been a relatively quiet summer season for this coastal resort community. Perhaps the "hottest" news reported by the weekly North Myrtle Beach Times had been the record high temperatures coupled with drought that had proved to be a plague to nearby farmers but a boom to the town's tourist industry. Another kind of heat was the subject of a front-page headline article in the July 21st edition of the Times. The article, headed "Frequent Turnovers Plaguing Police Dept. in NMB," contained certain allegations by former policemen directed toward Police Chief Merlin Bellamy and his management of the department.

Under the by-line of Times editor, Mike Little, the article quoted several of the former cops who contended that Bellamy's mis-management of the department was to blame for the increasing turnover of personnel. Also included in the article were excerpts from the resignation letter of former Patrolman Donald Watkins, dated June 25, 1977, with an effective date of June 30, 1977. In part, the letter said, "I cannot condone the unnecessary bickering, pettiness, jealousy and brutality that occurs and no one seems to care." Of his fellow policemen, Watkin's letter was quoted as saying, "There are a few, a very few, who use their uniforms and badges as a license to bully, hit and beat offenders when such actions are unnecessary...these are the people that should be weeded out."

John Cox, who was dismissed last year for leaving his patrol area without proper authorization, was quoted as saying that he believed his involvement with the now-defunct North Myrtle Beach Policemens Union was the actual cause of his dismissal. Cox had been president of that union, which was formed last year but subsequently lost its charter. Chief Bellamy was quoted as saying, "The union caused a lot of problems. I'm opposed to unions. There is no place in law enforcement for them. If you do your job and do it well, there is no reason to join a union."

> "...'The Chief is a powerful man whose influence extends in all directions. But there are a lot of people in the community who want to know the truth. There are also people who have something to say but are afraid to speak out'..."

Among the quoted allegations of the former cops were the "setting up" of policemen that Chief Bellamy wanted to get rid of, the institution of a "quota system" for speeding tickets, and having tickets "taken care of." It was also alleged that the Chief "tries to cause conflict between his personnel by trying to get one against the other."

Former Detective Jay Guyer, who had been vice-president of the union, was quoted as saying "Bellamy should be removed as Chief of Police and other problems will take care of themselves."

"According to some reports," the article stated, "Cpl. Terry White used unnecessary force on several occasions to bring offenders into custody." The reports were not attributed to any particular source, but were presumably given by the complaining ex-cops.

The publication of that article was the first instance in which the NMB Times had printed material that could be considered in opposition to Chief Bellamy. Although Little has since been accused by some people of carrying out a "personal vendetta" against Bellamy, the paper had been consistently supportive of the Chief and his department prior to the article. In an editorial printed in the same issue, in fact, Little wrote "Chief Merlin Bellamy has done an outstanding job of law enforcement for this area since he put on a uniform almost 30 years ago, but situations do change."

Little says that the Chief was "upset" when interviewed about the charges. "He called me before that issue came out," says Little, "and he felt that we owed him a sneak preview of the article." After the article was printed, the Chief allegedly made threats on the phone, employing "abusive and profane language."

There were unverified reports from various citizens that NMB police went about buying up copies of the Times issue containing the "Turnover" article as soon as they appeared on news racks, and that there were stacks of the paper at police HQ. Little says he has been unable to determine the truth behind those reports. Chief Bellamy, who declined to comment on any other aspect of the story to Osceola, dismissed the suggestion with a laugh, saying "I haven't heard anything about that."

A week after the first controversial article appeared, the Times carried a front-page article, again by Little, headed "Former Policemen Say Bellamy Should Be Removed." Again, former policemen were quoted, this time requesting a hearing of their grievances by the Mayor and City Council. More charges were aired, among them the allegation that tickets written by NMB cops were often changed so that fines could be reduced, thus keeping the revenues collected within the city rather than the county. Former Patrolman Cox claimed that Bellamy had told him to change tickets, so that, for example, charges of simple possession of drugs were altered to disorderly conduct or

It was in this article that certain complaints about Chief of Detectives Harry Harrelson were brought to light. He was named by the former policemen as the main reason for the former high turnover of personnel in the Force's detective division. They maintained that he "never makes a case", and that he had been known to tear up the reports of other detectives and take the credit himself. Donald L. Platt was quoted as saying, "Harry Harrelson could not track an elephant in 10 feet of snow."

Bellamy, according to the article, had declined comment on the allegations of his former employees. Apparently, he changed his mind and decided to come to the defense of Harrelson, who is reportedly a close friend. He was quoted as saying, "Harrelson is one of the smartest detectives I know of."

Within a few days of the publication of that second article, charges of criminal libel and slander were filed by Harry Harrelson against three of the ex-cops. Two of them were arrested and later released on bond, and the other appeared to post his own bond. The three were Jay Guyer, John Cox and Donald Platt. A libel suit for two million dollars was filed against Mike Little and Times Publisher Polly Lowman. The suit, by Cpl. Terry White, accuses Little and Lowman of "maliciously publishing misinformation about the plaintiff, with the intent to damage him."

> "...'It seems that the whole police department is watching us, and following us around,' she says. 'I just wonder who is out there serving and protecting the rest of the community'..."

On Tuesday, August 3, Mayor Bryan Floyd and The City Council of North Myrtle Beach, in executive session, heard witnesses complain about operations within the city police department. Among the 10 citizens who appeared at the session (which was also attended by Bellamy) were former policemen Guyer, Cox, and Platt. Polly Lowman was there to complain to council about threats which she said Bellamy had made to her. Her sister, Lois Watkins, wife of former patrolman Donald Watkins, told council that she had also been threatened. After hearing the complaintants for almost three hours, council took no action. It was expected that they would meet again soon to discuss the situation.

"It's important now that the mayor and city council take strong action, says Little. "The Chief is a powerful man whose influence extends in all directions. But there are a lot of people in the community who want to know the truth. There are also people who have something to say but are afraid to speak out."

"In the past," he continues, "we've always supported the police department. Now we've found something we have to investigate, and they jump on us." In reference to the patrol car parked across the street from the offices of the Times, he says, "There's one over there almost all the time now. I won't say we're being watched, but it seems that everywhere I go now I see police cars."

Polly Lowman seems to have no doubts that they are under surveillance but she is able to laugh about it. "It seems that the whole police department is watching us, and following us around," she says. "I just wonder who is out there serving and protecting the rest of the community."

The Energy Research Institute: Do we really need it?

and nuclear industries can expect significant opposition to future projects. The Energy Research Institute, crisis contend, headed by pro-nuclear forces and controlling significant federal, state and private energy research and development funds, could serve as an effective counterforce by disseminating pro-nuclear information and conducting studies the main thrust of which would be to develop strategies to head off public opposition.

Although the institute's goals are presently murky at best, its commitment to nuclear research is candidly admitted. All proposals currently mentioned by ERI as being considered are nuclear-related.

Pettis says, "The immediate proposals that we are working on are in the nuclear area because that's where people want to have the work and are willing to pay. South Carolina's strongest resource, if you will, is in the nuclear area because 34 percent of our electric power generation today comes from nuclear sources. We have the potential for the full nuclear sources. We We have the potential for the full nuclear cycle right here in the state. We have reactors, fuel fabrication, and the potential for fuel reporcessing.

"On the other hand," Pettis continues, "we don't have any coal; we don't have any on-shore oil or gas deposits. We have some solar but not the potential of the desert regions, and we have some slight tidal possibilities. But like any business or endeavor you set up, you've got to go where the money is, and right now there's a more abundant market in the area of nuclear study than in any of the other areas--(and) that's what South Carolina has to offer."

Pettis' statements cast doubt on ERI's paper assurances that it will seriously explore alternative power sources. Rather, the philosophy seems to be "make do and go with what we have"--an attitude that has stiffled many efforts to seek alternate solutions to problems. It's the same "we've committed ourselves and can't back out now" attitude that kept us in Vietnam for over a decade.

One project, currently being undertaken by ERI, is a study on nuclear siting—a study which was turned down by 17 other southeastern states in March of this year. The study is to select "the best possible site having the potential for being developed into a NEC." A "NEC" is a nuclear energy center, a cluster of from 10 to 40 nuclear generating facilities in one area. Scott McLeod, acting director of ERI, says the study will be to determine the "pros and cons" of the NEC concept.

The NEC concept is not new. In 1975 the Nuclear Regulatory Commission completed a massive study of the NEC on a national scale and concluded that each state or area should undertake its own feasibility studies of the NEC.

At that time, however, the State of South Carolina, through the Department of Health and Environmental Control, went on record as being opposed to the NEC concept. More recently the Southern Interstate Nuclear Board (SINB), an offshoot of the Southern Governors' Conference, set up a meeting to determine if any of its members were interested in doing a more detailed study within their states. South Carolina, which just a year before had voiced its opposition to the concept, was the only taker.

Although the state itself began original negotiations for the site-search grant (referred to by ERDA as Phase Two of NEC), the job has been turned over to ERI with the state's blessings. ERI has no technical staff and will farm the work out to consultants; the consultants will include Duke Power, SCE&G, the state Public Service Authority, the Savannah River Plant, Chem-Nuclear Services, and Allied General Nuclear Services.

Theoretically, these organizations will assist ERI in identifying potential NEC sites within the state and nominating a preferred site for a third-stage study. The study has not been completed, but the conclusions appear to be foregone. In a letter to SINB dated May 13, Governor James B. Hunt of North Carolina wrote: "Based on our understanding that favorable consideration is being given to South Carolina's proposal to designate an area near the Savannah River as a study site for a nuclear energy center, North Carolina will support South Carolina's interest in this matter. We understand that the site being considered has within a one-hundred mile radius thirteen planned nuclear units and an existing reprocessing facility."

After the Savannah River site (or some other) is officially selected, the NEC project will move into its third phase, a "siting demonstration study." ERI is currently negotiating for this contract. The study, as explained by several officials associated with it, will involve setting up a mock nuclear energy center, so that "social, economic and institutional impacts," among others, may be examined. The study will have as its purpose the "speed up of state and federal site review and approval procedures," according to ERI's prospectus. An SINB document describes as one of the purposes the "early resolution of regional nuclear power plant siting issues that arise as part of the regulatory process."

The two nuclear studies, both of which were originally conceived of as state projects and were quickly handed over to ERI last spring, lend credence to the observation make by one former employee of the Governor's Division of Administration.

"There was an attempt to rush through ERI before this administration left office because administration was obviously more disposed towards nuclear than someone who may follow," the employee said.

The employee's contention that the establishment of ERI was "rushed" is further supported by the curious history of a third proposal in which ERI is involved. The proposal involves the study of the feasibility of recovering and utilizing low-level waste heat from the Savannah River Plant. The "LLWH" proposal, like NEC, is not a new idea.

"There have been a large number of studies (of low level waste heat) which have been performed earlier which I think could suffice," one physics professor at the University of South Carolina told Osceola. But previous studies or no, ERDA has tendered a letter of intent with ERI for the study, and a contract is being finalized. ERI will receive about $700,000 for the work.

The proposal itself tends to support the contentions that the establishment of ERI was a rush job. According to several professors at the University of South Carolina, who saw the proposal before it was submitted to ERDA, it was "lacking in technical basis and expertise."

"It was my position that the proposal had no technical basis to it, it was just a bunch of words," an engineer who had studied the proposal said. "I just didn't think there were any technical people involved in the writing or conceiving of it. A former member of the Governor's staff who worked on sections of the proposals said he felt uncomfortable working on the LLWH proposal. "I just had the general feeling that nobody there knew what the hell they were talking about."

Another aspect of the proposal which seemed to bother those who reviewed it was that it had no real end-purposes in mind.

"The idea that you're going to take warm water and try to get the energy out of it—— well once you say that you can't stop: hell, that's no idea. If you want to have an idea, and you have to have some very sophisticated ones because this has been tried before, you have to find a way to do it," the engineer said.

"I just feel it lacks enough substance. It isn't the kind of thing that would get us funded through ERDA," one University professor said.

"It's a joke. It's a proposal for a three year paper study which could be completed in a few months. They could just study the Savannah River Plant to see if it has any characteristics which would make it any different from any of the other facilities studied by the federal government. They've done this at Hanford in Washington and it should really only take six or eight weeks to determine if SRP has any characteristics which would make it more or less suitable than any of the other sites," a physicist at the University said.

Why would ERDA fund a study which appears to have little purpose other than to provide start-up funds for ERI? And why choose ERI, which has no technical staff and will have to farm the study out? "I think there must be something political to it," the physicist said. And indeed there is something political to it.

Senator Strom Thurmond has enjoyed a long standing relationship with ERDA officials, and his influence on those officals is deemed not insignificant.

"Let's face it; he has voted with them on all the nuclear issues. They certainly look to him as an ally," one political observer said. And it seems the ever-present Thurmond was somewhat involved in getting the LLWH contract for ERI.

"Well, I wouldn't say the Senator was involved in negotiating," Thurmond aide Steve Jones told Osceola. "(But) he supported South Carolina's efforts in that behalf and sat in on a few meetings when they originally kicked this thing off."

Thurmond's involvement and the apparent lack of expertise on the part of those who drew up the proposal might serve to explain the curious reactions Osceola got from some ERDA officials regarding the proposal.

Osceola tried several times in the past three months to obtain copies of the proposal and ran into a solid wall of resistance. ERDA officials said the proposal, until the contract was awarded, was the property of ERI, a private corporation. ERI officials siad the proposal was a draft and was not in final form and therefore not available to the public. We finally obtained a copy of the executive summary just this week from DR. Lamar Priester. It was this summary, and earlier drafts which had been in their possession, on which the USC professors based their comments.

Marvin Gunn, an official with ERDA's Conservation section and the person responsible for LLWA's approval on the federal level, told Osceola he would not discuss the proposal or its contents with us.

"What is it you really want to know ?" Gunn said after Osceola called him back a third time with a question regarding the proposal.

Gunn refused to answer any questions saying he felt we were looking for dirt.

"I guess I'm getting defensive because I think you're looking for dirt in this and I don't appreciate it. I get paid to do an evaluation and my employers agreed with that evaluation. I suggest you talk to my legal people because I don't appreciate dirt and I don't like dirt. If you can't talk about something constructive I don't want to talk to you. You're getting me upset," Gunn said.

Whatever "dirt" may or may not have been involved in the funding of the LLWH study will soon be a moot point. A formal letter of intent has been signed without an iota of public input, despite the involvement of nearly $700,000 in public money.

Although ERI was established as a non-profit, private institution, public money has played a significant role in its early development. Established by an executive order of the Governor, ERI's actual status is nebulous; its supporters describe it as private, semi-public, semi-private, quasi-governmental. When Governor Edwards announced its formation, he said ERI would depend on federal and private funding sources, with the emphasis on "private." The skills and knowledge inherent in the private enterprise system would be brought to bear on energy problems, the Governor said. No state monies would be involved.

As of this date, no private money has been raised by ERI or the foundation established to fund it. Presumably private money will be forthcoming in the future. State money, on the other hand, has been spent on ERI from the start. Staff members of the Governor's office, DHEC and the State Development Board, some of whom were paid by the state funds, others by the federal funds under state control, brought ERI into being and later worked on funding proposals. Dozens were involved. At present ERI, with offices in Columbia bank building, is staffed in part with state employees, paid by either state funds or federal funds under state control.

And while ERI officials wait for federal ERDA money, the Governor's office has been busily seeking funds to keep the fledgling operation alive. By making a gift to ERI of the NEC and LLWH proposals, originally developed by or for the state, the Governor insured the availability of long-term funding. But ERI still needed some start-up money. The solution came in the form of a contract with the Governor's Division of Administration (DOA). ERI has contracted with DOA to "advise and consult" with the governor's office on energy problems he will face during the remainder of his term. For its advice, ERI will receive $100,000, some of which will surely be spent on technical consultants, as ERI has none of its own.

While making inquiries about ERI, Osceola discovered that the $100,000 would come from state--not federal--funds. Attempts were made to contact Walter Pettis to square the discovery with earlier statements that no state money would be involved.

Before Osceola was able to contact Pettis, he learned of our inquiries and contacted the Governor's press secretary Bob Liming. Liming in turn contacted a former colleague at The State newspaper, Levona Page. Page had quoted Pettis in a July interview to the effect that no state funds would be involved in ERI. Page went to Pettis' office and was told about the $100,000; a story by Page appeared in the next day (August 2) which explained the state funds away as an oversight. Page noted in her story that Pettis had initiated the interview.

Osceola contacted Page August 2, and she reported that Liming had contacted her the previous day. An Osceola reporter explained to her that Osceola had made inquiries about the $100,000. She then indicated that she thought something was going on when she was contacted by Liming. She refused to discuss further details of the meeting with Pettis, instead suggesting Osceola contact Liming for an explanation. Another story by Page appeared in The State August 4, detailing where the state funds had come from.

Pettis told Page and later told Osceola that "when we were talking about how we would get this institute boot-strapped and running, I asked if funds were available and was told that $100,000 was available from DOA. I assumed it was federal money. That assumption was wrong. It was state money."

In her story of August 4, Page quoted Dr. James Meridith, a gubernatorial aide who handled the paperwork on the DOA contract, as saying that the intent had always been to repay the $100,000 to the state when federal money was forthcoming. Osceola asked Pettis how the intent could have been to repay the state if he and other ERI officials were unaware it was state money to begin with.

"Well, it was a communication problem between him (Meridith) and me,"Pettis said. "I think it was done without any malicious or ill intent. It was done as a communication problem...."

In addition to the $100,000 from the DOA, ERI is also in line for a $30,000 contract with the State Development Board to provide energy needs-and-availablity surveys for industries interested in locating in the state. The contract was not let for competitive bid but awarded to ERI on the basis of "peculiar knowledge," according to Earl Ellis of the development board. Ellis admitted the contract would be a shot in the arm for ERI.

"This office has a very strong interest in the success and development of the ERI because it's just a real strong adjunct to the economic growth and development of the state. In fact, you know we were a strong participant, we as an agency, in the creation of ERI. So we have a proprietary interest in its growth and success," Ellis said. Ellis did not elaborate on what "peculiar knowledge" the fledgling institute could possess without a staff.

According to State Development Board head Robert Leak, the $30,000 which will be given to ERI is federal not state money. "It is federal money which we have left over from previous contracts. This is where we got the money and we ended up by doing the job a little cheaper, so we had this money left over. As far as I know none of it is state money," Leak said.

But a source close to ERI claims the $30,000 is state money--part of a $40,000 appropriation to the development board designated originally for an industrial parks study. The source says $10,000 went to an engineering firm who did some basic work; the remainder of the money was then set aside for ERI.

In its present state, it is difficult to justify the existence of the Energy Research Institute. Despite its apparent ability to attract state and federal contracts, ERI will have to farm out most of its work to private consulting firms, as it has no immediate plans to develop an adequate professional staff. The jobs obviously could have been funded through existing state agencies to existing private firms.

Leak, who is an ERI board member as well as development board chief, offers this justification. "We really felt that the companies who would contract for research would prefer to deal with a private entity. It's old adage that science and politics don't mix."

In the overview, there is a large gap between the idea of ERI and the reality; between the "free enterprise" posture and the inflow of government funding; between the touting of alternate energy sources and the extensive nuclear research.

ERI officials say this will all change; it just takes time to get started, and in the future the gap will be narrowed. An objective institute, beholding to no special interests, is promised.

But that seems unlikely. The present board is dominated by nuclear-oriented interests and is a self-perpetuating entity empowered to fill two-thirds of all board vacancies. (The Governor fills the rest.) At this point in time, ERI appears to be a power base for pro-industry, pro-nuclear interests who no doubt believe their plan for the state's future is best. There is no one on the board to tell them any different, to lobby for other points of view. And that's unfortunate, because the idea of ERi is a good one, a needed one. The reality is something else again.

"persons with medical problems," as your editorial states, the "Health Line" is a dial-access system intended for use by virtually anyone with a desire for valid, useful and understandable health information.

The "Health-Line" system is literally as near as the telephone. Although a pamphlet which facilitates use of the "Health-Line" is widely available at hospitals, health departments, physician's offices and by request, it is not necessary for callers to either have the pamphlet or to request a particular tape by number. An operator is always on duty to assist callers who request tapes by topic; either by selecting the appropriate tape or by documenting the request should the subject be one not presently available in the "Health-Line" library which currently contains more than 200 health messages. Accessibility is, then, certainly no drawback to the system.

From the list of caller's requests, new "Health-Line" tapes are either purchased or developed locally by experts on the particular subject. You should be aware that it is the responsibility of a local Advisory Council, composed of physicians, ministers, hospital administrators, and other health care providers, to screen all scripts for accuracy as well as for area acceptibility. Additionally, the "Health-Line" system is endorsed by local Medical Societies. Your reference to the system as an "X-rated hot line" is, therefore, an insult not only to us, but also to Advisory Council members as well as to physicians in two of the state's largest Medical Societies.

Relative to your story about the Governor calling "Health-Line" for publicity purposes and listening first to a dental tape and later to one on vaginitis for some vicarious "locker room laughs," the second call never occured. According to the "Health-Line" operator on duty at the time and according to the log of calls received on that day, only the dental tape and one other on hypertension, were requested by callers in the Columbia area. Although you will no doubt stand by your unnamed but "highly reliable source," according to our records, the tape on vaginitis was never requested on the day in question.

If the "Health-Line" has a drawback it is that the system is admittedly limited with regard to controlling what people do with the information once they have it. It is hoped that by increasing the people's awareness and knowledge of health related subjects that better community health will result through increased prevention and early disease detection. However, as your editorial made explicit, some people dial "Health-Line" primarily for "jollies," request a tape such as the one on masturbation and expect to be titillated by instruction in new techniques. Such people are certainly disappointed with the contents of the tapes - unless, of course they are childishly stimulated by the simple use of formerly taboo words such as penis, vagina, masturbation and the like. Thus, it is saddest of all that the very people who could benefit most from the information, probably don't because like you, they pervert it's true educational intent.

Having noticed that Osceola does not routinely publish letters to the Editor, I am requesting that due to the offensive nature of your editorial, you make an exception in this case. Your reading public is entitled to know just how cheap your shots at responsible editorialization can get.

We rechecked our source on the Edwards' story which was related to us more than a year ago. The source says the Governor did not actually call; he and one or more of his associates were having a few "locker room laughs" as they perused the list of available tapes, and found "masturbation" and "vaginitis" particularly yuckable.

Modest proposal

Dear Sir:

Since when I read the State newspaper I quickly turn the page when I get to the editorial section ( I once read it but became nauseous and puked all over the page), I depend on you and others to let me know when something of interest crops up.

I thought that W.C. "Wildbill" Workman's idea that women who seek abortions in South Carolina are admitting to illegal acts of adultery and fornication was a clever observation indeed. (Osceola, July 29.) When he puts his nose to it, how perceptive "Wildbill" can be!

His logic, of course, leads to all sorts of conclusions.

For example, according to the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control, it is against state law to allow the discharge of any noxious or nauseous fumes into the air. Therefore, I suggest that the next time "Wildbill" and his editorial pals let go a fart on the streets of Columbia, they be arrested for air pollution.

As I see it the only solution is for "Wildbill" to strap a catalytic converter around his ass when he leaves the office.

Cinema

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790.

Two X-rated flicks, as usual--"Confessions of Linda Lovelace" with Linda in the flesh and "Seduction". Continuous runs begin at 11 a.m.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790.

"Winter Heat" and "Teenage Stepmother" add to the X-rated features. The show starts at 11 a.m. and runs continuous thereafter.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011.

Often worth the price of admission alone, Richard Pryor stars in his latest feature film "Greased Lightning," along with Pam Greer (Rosie's sister) and Cleavon Little ("Blazin' Saddles"). It's rated PG.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

"Greased Lightning" also plays here. Richard Pryor, Pam Greer and Cleavon Little. Rated PG.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

"Star Wars," written and directed by George Lucas ("American Graffiti"), continues. It's all about an interstellar war and it's rated PG. Stars Alex Guiness, Peter Cushing and Mark Hamill. Be prepared to stand in line.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"Dogs" (or Jaws with paws) begins it's Columbia run at three theatres (oh boy). It stars that man from U.N.C.L.E., David McCallum, and it's rated R.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"One on One," starring Robby Benson ("Ode to Billy Joe"), is about basketball and love. The screenplay was written by Benson some time ago, but was only recently turned into a movie. Rated PG.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212.

"Dogs" plays here too. It stars David McCallum and is rated R.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

Sissy Spacek returns as "Carrie," the belle of her high school prom. It also stars John Travolta and Piper Laurie and is rated PG. Spacek and Laurie were both nominated for Oscars for their performances.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"Silver Streak" continues for still another week. It's all about a wierd trainride from California to Chicago and it stars Gene Wilder and Richard Pryor. Rated PG.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 254-6731.

"March or Die" is a romantic war movie (is that a contradiction?) about the French Foreign Legion. It stars Gene Hackman, Terrence Hill, Max Von Sydow and Catherine Deneuve. Rated PG.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 779-0826.

"The Other Side of Midnight" continues for another lonnnnnnng week. It's a boring soap-opery tale about love and revenge which features Marie-France Pisier in her least credible role. Shows begin at 1, 4:10, 7:20 and 10:30 p.m.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 765-0282.

"Orca, the Killer Whale," a spin-off from the box office success of "Jaws," continues downtown. It stars Richard Harris and newcomer Charlotte Rampling and is rated PG. Showtimes are 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 254-7960.

"Smokey and the Bandit" continues, starring Burt Reynolds (the bandit) and Jackie Gleason (the smokey). Rated PG.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

You make some big bucks on one film, so you make another along the same lines. That's what "The Bad News Bears Break Training" is. Unfortunately, it's without the help of the mainstays of the original "Bad News Bears"--Walter Matthau and Tatum O'Neal. Show start at 1:15, 3:15, 5:15, 7:15 and 9:15 p.m. Rated PG.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

Walt Disney's "Rescuers" continues. It's animated cartoon fun along the lines, some say, of "Fantasia"--one of Disney's best. It's rated G and shows begin at 1:30, 4, 6:30 and 9 p.m.

SPRING VALLEY I THEATRE, Two Notch Road at i'20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"Star Wars" will be in Columbia for awhile, so get used to it. If you want ot see it (if you're one of the few that hasn't), be prepared to stand in line. Stars Alex Guiness, Peter Cushing and Mark Hamill. Rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY II THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"The Spy Who Loved Me," the tenth in the Bond series continues. This one stars Roger Moore ("The Saint") as agent 007. Also stars Barbara Bach. Rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY III THEATRE, Two Notch Raod at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"MacArthur," the story of the late-great general, continues. It stars Gregory Peck in what some say is a perfect performance. It's rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY IV THEATRE, Two Notch Road at i-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"Dogs" is everywhere. It's the latest attempt at film horrifics and it's rated R. Stars David McCallum.
